DELEGATED INVESTMENT MANAGER'S COMMENT^

- U.S. Treasury market weakened further in October, as bond yields soared further on the back of solid economic data. However, it was mostly concentrated in the longer maturities, as enlarged bond supply drove demand-supply imbalance. Meanwhile, bond yields in the front-end entered in a range-trading mode, as officials at the Federal Reserves (Fed) looked to have divided opinion about further rate-hikes after the recent spike in bond yields driving tighter financial condition. On data front, incoming data continued to suggest that economic activities remained resilient, with the latest PMI for both manufacturing and services sector coming in better than expected. Labor market remained tight, as highlighted by the September nonfarm payrolls surprising on the upside. Meanwhile, main inflation gauges, including CPI and PCE, came largely in line with expectations for September. To close the month, yield on the 10-year benchmark U.S. Treasury note increased by 36 basis points to 4.93%. Meanwhile, yield of the 2-year tenor rose by 4 basis points to 5.09%, resulting in a less inverted yield curve.
- Global equities closed lower for the third consecutive month from its July peak. Mixed earnings reports also added to global market volatility amid risk-off sentiment as investors became more discerning and focused on future profitability than past results. Defensive stocks outperformed cyclical with utilities sector stood out.
- During the month, US equities fell less and outperformed other regions. Global fixed income posted a decline with higher government bond yields and stronger US dollar.
- In the near term, risks remain elevated around monetary policy tightening, geo-politics and growth uncertainty. As a result, volatility in markets will remain higher than normal.
